SAMUEL GARDNER DRAKE.

HIS LIFE-WORK AND HIS LIBRARY.

"That place that does contain
My Books, the best companions, is to me
A glorious court, where hourly I converse
With the old sages and philosophers."—Fletcher.

THE library which is here offered to the public is that of the late Samuel Gardner Drake, of Boston, who died June 14th, 1875. It was his wish that it might become the property of some institution, and thus attest the care he had bestowed in forming and perfecting it.

Mr. Drake began business in Boston, as a bookseller, in 1828, and, except about a year and a half passed in Europe, continued to be identified with that business until the day of his last illness. There is, in his library, an antiquated and much used duodecimo having the following memorandum written on a fly-leaf: "Bought in 1828. In 1830 the first Antiquarian Book-store was established by me in Cornhill, and the letters on my sign were fashioned from those in this book." He affixed this sign in Cornhill, where for nearly a quarter of a century it was familiar to the passer-by as first to announce the establishment of an antiquarian book-store in the United States.

The "Antiquarian Book-store" became the resort of men who made the literature of that day, and in not a few instances for all time. Of this company, Bancroft, Prescott, Hildreth, Sparks, and Hillard, Revs. Wm. Jenks, Thad. M. Harris, Starr King, and E. H. Chapin, Edward Everett, O. A. Brownson, J. T. Buckingham, W. J. Snelling, Geo. Lunt, and Nathan Hale, are best remembered. Macdonald Clarke and Peter Force were always to be found there when in Boston. Brownson occupied himself in ferreting among theological tomes; and O. W. Holmes, then a student of medicine, in searching for books on the healing art. Good Dr. Jenks, whose smile was a benediction, and whose black small-clothes were the latest seen in Boston, was an almost daily visitor. Time and occasion do not permit the further indulgence of memories awakened from long slumber at mention of these names.

The book-store was not then what it has since become, the casual resort of bookish men, but a kind of literary exchange, frequented quite as much for congenial companionship as for mere buying and selling. Authors and books, coming literary events, or the current news of the day were freely discussed. The bookseller was expected to know something of the merits of his wares, and to occupy as far as he might, the neutral ground of an impartial critic. Booksellers and authors had borne the most intimate relations since Shakspeare's day, and we can seldom turn the pages of the great masters of English literature without finding the virtues or vices of the merchant celebrated or condemned. Nothing that his pen had produced gave Mr. Drake greater pride than to add his name to the roll which already included those of John Foster, Phillips, John Dunton, Thos. Hancock, Henry Knox, Isaiah Thomas, and Saml. T. Armstrong,—the old Boston booksellers.

In 1825, before he located in Cornhill, Mr. Drake had issued a reprint, at moderate cost, of Church's "King Philip's War." The enterprise proved successful, and another edition was soon called for. The preface and appendix to the original edition were his first literary productions for the public eye. "Philip's War" was followed, in 1832, by the "Indian Biography" which became merged in a fuller work, in 1833, called the "Book of the Indians." In 1851, when eleven editions had been exhausted, the author's interest in it ceased. The "Old Indian Chronicle" (1836) and "Indian Captivities" (1844) enlarged his labors in this department of American History,—that in which he took the deepest interest, and for which he had made a collection believed to be unrivalled. His annotations of fresh editions of "Hubbard's Narrative," of "Mather's Philip's War," of "Mather's Relation," and of the "Old Indian Chronicle," his "French and Indian War" (1744–47), have supplemented and enriched a compact collection of Indian annals, prepared with scrupulous fidelity to fact. Had he lived, Mr. Drake would have continued usefully to employ the materials he had constantly been accumulating.

Next to the "Book of the Indians," though far exceeding it in the labor exacted of the author, is the "History and Antiquities of Boston." It was four years in passing through the press: the first number having appeared in September, 1852, and the completed work in 1856. Mr. Drake had been applied to by the literary executor of Dr. Caleb Snow, an earlier historian, who had built upon the modest yet useful work of Shaw, to edit a new edition of "Snow's History." He at first consented to undertake the task; yet, upon consideration, declined it, for reasons expressed in the preface to his own history. He then resolved to employ the large store of materials that he had gathered upon a work of his own.

As a local chronicle, the "History of Boston" more fully realized the author's aim than, perhaps, usually happens; but it far exceeded the limits originally prescribed. The writer thinks he had greater pride in it than in any other of his productions. He who had built atom upon atom alone realized the magnitude of the completed structure. No official patronage was bestowed upon it. The business management was inefficient; yet the book would have eventually proved a not unprofitable venture had not the stereotype plates been destroyed. The author's greatest reward was the knowledge that his work had stood the test of time and criticism, had steadily grown in public esteem, and occupied a permanent niche in American literature. It is his legacy to the people of Boston.

During the twenty years which elapsed since the "History" appeared, Mr. Drake's interest in his subject never flagged, nor had he intermitted the search for materials to complete it. Three years before his death, some friends, who were impressed with the magnitude of his preparation, and who knew that his heart was in the work, obtained from the City Government an agreement to defray the cost of the mechanical execution of a new volume, completing the "History" to 1822, the year in which Boston became a city. The volume would have embraced fifty years crowded with History, — the periods of the Revolution and the War of 1812. It was a task which any man in the meridian of life might hesitate to attempt.

The then venerable author, over-persuaded by the arguments of those friends, unwilling to leave an uncompleted work behind him, prepared to engage upon the new volume; but increasing infirmity admonished him that he was no longer capable of such unremitting mental application as would be necessary to complete the work within the allotted time. Laying down his pen, he remarked to the writer, "The time may come when Boston will recognize the magnitude of her history in a manner worthy the dignity of her past and present. My work must now end."

Although the works mentioned are those by which Mr. Drake is best known as an author, they by no means render the catalogue complete. He believed his literary mission to be the rescue of every memorial of the founders of New England, and his devotion to the work was boundless. To reach the source whence the earliest testimony might be drawn, he visited England in 1858; and, putting aside the temptation to explore her memorable historic places, at once busied himself among the archives of the British Museum, the State Paper and Rolls Offices.

His volume entitled the "Founders of New England" was the result of unwearied research for the antecedents of early emigrants to New England. It has recently been before the public in connection with a more elaborate work of the same character, issued by the successors of John Camden Hotten. The comparison instituted by an eminent antiquary between the modest quarto of Mr. Drake and the royal octavo of the English publishers was highly favorable to the more unassuming work, as having first occupied the ground, and as giving all of importance that the later work contained. Mr. Drake meditated another edition of the "Founders." He was desirous of correcting the errors of the first issue, and had made large additions to his materials.

While still a very young man, the casual perusal of a life of Sir Francis Drake had excited an interest which he himself characterizes as intense. It induced him to begin a collection designed for a future biography of the navigator. Among the printed authorities secured for the purpose are several rare and perfect editions of the "World Encompassed," and "Sir F. Drake Revived." He now availed himself of the opportunity to pursue his investigations not only among mouldy documents of Elizabeth's time, but on scenes familiar to the early life of the renowned seaman. The famous old West-of-England and Channel seaports possessed great interest for him, not only with respect to the man who boasted that he had "singed the Spanish King's beard," but for their association with American discovery. Five manuscript volumes, closely written, embody the results of a research for the biography of Drake extending over more than forty years.

It is appropriate to mention Mr. Drake's connection with a periodical with which he was closely identified as publisher and editor for fifteen years. In 1844, five gentlemen, one of whom was Mr. Drake, originated the New England Historic, Genealogical Society. Charles Ewer, an old Boston bookseller, was its first president. Perceiving the importance of a literary organ, the founders of the society projected the publication since known throughout the greater part of its existence, as the "New England, Historical and Genealogical Register." To begin its literary life the society had little influence, no very liberal share of public sympathy, and no money. Only one man could be found who was willing to accept the pecuniary risk of its publication. He also assumed the payment of a salary to its first editor, Rev. Wm. Cogswell, and in January, 1847, the first number appeared.

A constituency numerous enough to support a publication exclusively designed to promote "genealogical and antiquarian researches" did not then exist on this side the Atlantic. It was found impracticable to employ a paid editor after the first year. The publisher struggled with increasing financial perplexities for thirteen years, during the greater part of which he also filled the post of editor. Wearied with the incessant and thankless labor of his undertaking, Mr. Drake, at the close of the year 1861, retired from active management of the "Register."

Besides the gentlemen mentioned, the "Register," has had a number of editors, many of whom deserve the gratitude of all who sympathize with its objects. But Mr. Drake was the father of the "Register"; he presided at its birth, nursed its puny life; protected it from the malice of some, the indifference of others. His name appears as editor upon the title-leaf of six volumes; though he actually edited it for nine and a half of the thirteen years he was publisher.

These labors in behalf of the "Register," were performed between the years 1847 and 1861, while Mr. Drake was engaged upon some of his most arduous literary tasks. It will readily be imagined that his hours for leisure were few; yet like Southey, he was never quite happy unless engrossed with some appalling undertaking.

Through the possession of some important manuscripts, such as the original "Examination of Hugh Parsons," in 1651; Increase Mather's "Cases of Conscience," with other documents relative to the Salem outbreak, Mr. Drake's attention was directed quite early to the development of witchcraft phenomena in New England. In 1866, he brought out carefully annotated editions of Mather's "Wonders of the Invisible World," and Calef's "More Wonders." In 1869, he added the "Annals of Witchcraft," in which were enumerated the cases in New England from the beginning. These, with the work of Mr. Upham, constitute a group of standard authorities on the subject.

As it is impracticable to continue here the detail of our author's undertakings, the reader is referred to the nearly complete list which is comprised in the catalogue. He maintained an extensive correspondence, and kept a daily journal in which were jotted down events of personal or public interest. He had carved out new tasks, which were destined never to be accomplished.

It is not too much to say that he, with a few other men, created an active sympathy in antiquarian research, of which scores of town histories, family memorials, and genealogies are the fruit. It was, at first, like laying down a railway in a country destitute of population; but these pioneers lived to see a numerous and intelligent class arise to push the spirit of inquiry into the deepest and darkest recesses of the past; to witness a growing veneration for its visible relics, a sympathy with its invisible influence, to which the greatest disciples of literary art have been most susceptible.

The writer feels the task of arranging and exhibiting as merchandise what have so long been regarded as old and trusty friends, much as he would a sale of human chattels. The books had become so familiar to their late owner that he knew them by their outward dress. Many had been exchanged three and four times for better editions, broader margins, or firmer bindings. Many a time-stained tract had been restored from a bundle of tattered rags to be a decent and useful member of society. Only a genuine bibliophile can realize the solicitude he feels for a rare edition or scarce legible manuscript. His touch is more a caress than a touch, and he at last acquires a degree of affection for his treasures according to the virtues, merits, or traits of their authors.

At the time of his death Mr. Drake possessed fifteen thousand volumes and thirty thousand pamphlets directly or collaterally relevant to American History, Biography, Genealogy, Poetry, Theology, or Education. The detail of voyages and travels to or within the American Continents, geographical or topographical descriptions of the territory, archæological researches, the annals of aboriginal tribes, newspapers, almanacs, portraits, autographs, and manuscripts reinforce the collection in its serviceable departments, as different branches constitute an effective army.

That this was no idle hoard is perhaps already evident in the enumeration of the works that the owner's pen called into being. The thousand fly-leaf notes, in his hand, attest careful perusal and mature judgment. Was a book skulking under a false title or fictitious imprint, it was cast out of the collection, with its character legibly written upon its face; did an author err in stating a fact or a date the lapse was instantly noted. Much information valuable or curious, respecting the books or their subjects, often appears in a few words, for which some future owner will thank the antiquary's care.

Except a choice number of valuable tracts, the nucleus of the collection was formed during Mr. Drake's absence abroad. He brought from England books to the value of about £400, and for nearly twenty years has been adding book upon book from every available resource. There are titles in nearly every civilized tongue, imprints from a thousand presses. A collection thus formed may be said to resemble a monument to which all the world has contributed. And its dissolution may well excite the regret of men of literary tastes.

Many rare titles were picked up in the bookstalls of London, Edinburgh, Paris, and the provincial cities and towns of England, that are now hardly attainable; others cost years of patient waiting to secure. Numerous autographs add especial interest to the volumes themselves. One likes to read from the book which Cotton Mather, John Wheelwright or Southey perused. Elegant and costly bindings by Riviere, Bedford, Matthews and Low appeal to a taste for the beautiful in the binding art. As a rule the books have Mr. Drake's signature.

In American History, general or local, and in Genealogy, the collection is believed to be unmatched. Besides more than five hundred bound volumes, there are eight thousand tracts under the heads of Local History and Genealogy; and about two thousand under that of Biography. The list of scarce American histories is too long for repetition. It embraces original editions of Hubbard, Mather and Penhallow's "Indian Wars," the folio "Magnalia," Prince's "Chronology," a Hutchinson of 1764, Morton's "Memorial," Trumbull's "Connecticut," Smith's "New York," Beverley's "Virginia," Backus's "Church History," etc. It is full and compact in whatever relates to the Colonial or Revolutionary wars, or to those of 1812 and 1861.

In American magazines, almanacs, and newspapers; in the collections of historical societies; in works on Theology, — including sermons and controversial tracts, from the Mathers, Whitefield, Chauncy, Mayhew, and Jona. Edwards, to Channing and Theodore Parker, on Baptism, Swedenborgianism, and Quakerism, — Mr. Drake made special efforts to render his authorities complete. Masonic literature is another specialty; and in American poetry five hundred bound volumes and many tracts, embrace the scarce editions of Mather Byles, Freneau, R. T. Paine, Barlow, Trumbull, Humphreys, Theo. Dwight, etc., with such later favorites as Macdonald Clarke, Halleck, Poe, Bryant, Longfellow, etc.

The library is singularly rich in English books, grouped in the same general divisions with the American. There are thirteen editions of Hudibras, inclusive of the first; with fine copies of Spenser, Milton, Cowley and Prior. English History is represented in legitimate succession from Stow, Speed and Rapin, to Macaulay and Froude. Sammes, Ogilby, Camden, Raleigh, are represented by superb folios; as are Fuller, Baxter, Fox, Bishop Burnet, etc. In voyages, the Collections of Hakluyt (editions of 1585 and 1600), of Purchas, Van Linschoten, Lord Oxford, Drake, Ulloa, Anson, Sir Robert Mansell (Algiers voyage, 1621), Dampier and Cook, are a formidable group; while Nares' splendid quarto of Lord Burghley, Phillips' "World of Words," Bailey's English "Dictionary," Le Neve's "Fasti," are supplemented with a goodly following of local histories and tracts, having early imprints. A small library is comprised in the 175 volumes of the "London" and "Gentleman's" Magazines, the depositories of much history relative to America. Samuel Clarke, Nathaniel Crouch, Bishop Berkeley, George Whitefield, John Dunton, and William Cobbett, have many titles. There are fine editions of "Acosta," of Lewes Robert's "Mappe of Commerce," Hondy's "History of the World" (1635), etc.; also valuable tracts relative to the Civil Wars.

Since its owner's decease this Library has remained wholly intact. It is believed to be the most perfect and compact collection ever offered for sale in the United States. It is not a miscellaneous gathering in which a few rare works find place; but one in which every book has an ascertained value. The information necessary to organize such a mass of literary materials is of slow acquisition, and bears no small proportion to their intrinsic worth. There, are, doubtless, books that may not soon again be seen outside the collection of some virtuoso. This army of authors, which might be wielded with great effect as a unit, is now to be disbanded.

Mr. Drake last visited his library on the eighth of June. The writer parted with him at about four o'clock in the afternoon. He appeared much fatigued, but if sensible of approaching illness did not mention it. The malady with which he was attacked, pneumonia, terminated fatally on the fourteenth.

He had received many honors from learned bodies, and was a member of the Society of Northern Antiquaries of Copenhagen. He was at different times president of the N. E. Historic, Genealogical, and Prince Societies, both of which he helped to originate. In 1843, the honorary degree of A. M. was conferred on him by Union College. It is but just to say, that he neither undervalued nor courted public distinction. His stores of information were freely imparted, even when some careless visitor has asked for the result of long and toilsome research. Many younger men were his pupils who have since made names. He loved his studies and his friends. In the midst of his family he often indulged in playful raillery, and no man more keenly relished a witticism. The past did not engross him to the exclusion of the present. He closely followed the drift of events and the careers of public men. Having exceeded his three-score and ten, he laid down the pen which for half a century had seldom been idle, and passed away with a composure that forbids regret:

> "Yet leaving here a name I trust
> That shall not perish in the dust."

S. A. D.

BOSTON, Feb. 22, 1876.

THE books are arranged alphabetically under authors' names, if known, and when unknown under their titles. This method is adhered to throughout, except in the special collections of pamphlets, as BIOGRAPHIES, GENEALOGIES, POETRY, INDIAN AND LOCAL HISTORY, etc. when for convenient reference each subject is placed in a group. Mr. Drake's Catalogue has been adopted, except where judicious pruning might be necessary to reduce its bulk.

The magnitude of the whole collection has rendered it impracticable to prepare a Catalogue of the Manuscripts, Autographs, and Portraits, or of about 15,000 pamphlets, in time for the sales of May and June. They will, however, form the subject of a special sale, of which seasonable notice will be given.

No reference is made to bindings, although many specimens of exquisite workmanship are in the library; the whole number which might deserve especial mention on this account is so great, that it has been thought inexpedient to encumber the Catalogue with their description.

The unusually excellent condition of the books has attracted the favorable notice of librarians and collectors who have examined them; it was an object of great care with the late owner. Imperfections have been noted wherever they are known to occur.

In mentioning books as "scarce," or "very scarce," the uninstructed collector is reminded that the oldest are not always the most uncommon; many titles printed within the century are more difficult to obtain than very old books. It has been considered unnecessary to draw special attention to titles of which the great rarity is of common notoriety; such are the Mather publications, early Election Sermons, etc.

The portrait is inserted by the courtesy of W. H. Whitmore, Esq.

The library will remain on exhibition at 17 Bromfield Street (Boston), until April 1st.

Decidedly one of the most readable books on America that has come from the pen of a foreigner. Unlike many English travellers, the marquis praises what is worthy, and little escaped his observing eye. He was one of the generals of Rochambeau's army. The transla or's notes have occasioned much comment for their caustic allusions to prominent public men; their paternity is a question almost as vexatious as the authorship of Junius.

—— 5th Ser. Vol. 1. Boston: 1871. 8°.

The first ten vols. (1st series) are the original ed. They are, perhaps, as historically valuable as any similar number of books in N. E. History that might be selected. They contain chronicles of the early voyages to New England, and many topographical descriptions of towns, etc. The Complete Collection forms a library of itself.

2080 —— of the New Hampshire Hist. Soc. for 1824. Vols. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. Vol. 1 to 8 inclusive, 1824–1866. 8 vols. Concord: 8°.

An occasional challenge is seen in the newspapers, to produce an example of a Jew converted to Christianity. Monis (Judah,) the first Hebrew instructor in Harvard College, was a native of Italy, and after his arrival in this country began his instructions about the year 1720. Though a Jew, he embraced the Christian religion; was publicly baptized at Cambridge, in 1722; after the death of his wife, 1761, he resigned his office which he had sustained for about forty years, and retired to Northboro. The preface to "The Truth" is by Increase Mather.

3577 —— Poems written between 1768 and 1794. New ed. Monmouth, N. J.: 1795. 8°.

A very rare edition. Freneau's decided poetic genius became with him rather a means than an end. He wrote to elevate and strengthen the patriotic cause in the Revolution, and some of his lyrics will still quicken the pulse. Trumbull, Freneau, Barlow, Paine and Humphrey are names that will live in American poetry.

5391 KNIGHT, SARAH. Journals of, and Rev. Mr. Buckingham, from the original MS. N. Y.: 1825. 12°.

The first, a record of a journey from Boston to New York in 1704, is curious reading. Fourteen days' travel on horseback through a comparative wilderness, is now difficult to realize as the luxurious journey of half as many hours through a populous region. Buckingham's Diary contains notes of the expedition of 1710 to Port Royal; of a land journey from Cape Ann to Hartford same year; and of the exped. agt. Crown Point, 1711. [Very scarce.]

LOCAL HISTORY. [Pamphlets only, — bound vols. are under authors.]

The collection embraces 131 volumes (or about 4000 tracts), in which materials of every kind, relative to the history of towns, have been collected, examined and arranged under their proper titles. Every one who is acquainted with the difficulty of consulting scattered pamphlets will perceive the value of such a classification; and any one interested in a town will find materials already prepared for him.

the World. 2 vols. Worcester: 1810. 8°. Port., &c. [Very scarce.]

Valuable in every sense. If this book had not been written, we should now be without the annals of printing in the American Colonies. The author began life in poverty and raised himself to the control of an extensive business. His own life connected two historic eras, so that he was able to give interesting personal sketches of the old pre-revolutionary printers; and of a literature that will never diminish in interest. It is evident that Thomas wrote largely from recollection, as errors occur in his work for which we are at a loss to account; still less for their appearance in the recent edition. The original edition has been scarce for many years. Buckingham drew upon it freely for his Specimens of Newspaper Literature.
